So Are Some of the Other
Ingredients of a Good,
Hearty Dinner.

FIVE CAN DINE FOR $4.

Cocktails and Taxicabs Have Much to Do With High Cost of Living.

Just a little more of the turkey—some of the turkey, if you don't mind a few turkeys, some sweet potatoes, some celery, a little cranberry sauce—

Not so fast! Just a minute while we glance and consider the high cost of living. The old-fashioned turkey, when its capacity was limited only by the number of gobblers we could get out in our backyards, is gone; the time when we could fill up on the corn, plum, and turkey, and then sit down to a meal of turkey, is only a memory. It may be necessary to go to a lot of trouble to get a turkey, and a lot of money to buy it. The high cost of turkey, at least, has reached three cents per pound. The turkey that it took thirty-eight cents a pound to buy last Thanksgiving can be carried away for thirty-five cents today, and that means a tip-top turkey, no gaunt specimen of a fowl who looks as if he had been kept too long before being killed and too long after, but an A. No. 1 bird—the finest that can be bought. Of course, if you are eccentric and insist upon violating the traditions of the day, you can have Long Island duck, which will cost you twenty-five cents a pound, or Philadelphia chicken for thirty-two cents. With a little care and by looking in a lot of places before you buy, you may be able to get a turkey for thirty or even twenty-five cents a pound, but officially the best ones go for thirty-five, and not a cent less.

At any rate there is no longer any reason for threading the crowded thoroughfares of the market district with downy heads and ever avoiding the beak and claw of whatever they are—of turkeys, and the crates bursting with fresh, crisp celery, stacked mountain high, or the jars of the cranberry, much redder if not so sweet as the type of a country lane.

You will find that there has been a reduction in all the Thanksgiving commodities that sweet potatoes have come down from eleven cents a quart to ten; that there has been a slight lowering in the price of cranberries, noticeable, however, when you buy them in large quantities. The only product that has actually gone up is the Irish potato, and is only a few cents higher in price than the sweet potato.

Onions, the very strongest, are still fifteen cents a quart, and celery can be bought for ten cents a bunch. Squashes, turnips, radishes—all sell for the identical price at which they were listed last year.

Some cost of market products," continued a Washington Market dealer today, "has remained practically the same for the last forty years. If people were content with the same things that pleased them in the old days there wouldn't be so much talk about the high cost of living. Leaving out the cost of the turkey, which is a family of five, ought to be able to get one of the best imaginable dinners for a total expenditure of $4. There would be an eight-pound turkey, which the dealer figured at $2.40; a quart of Irish potatoes and a quart of sweet, amounting to twenty cents; five cents' worth of turnips; two bunches of celery for twenty cents; a mince pie for twenty-five cents, leaving ninety cents for oranges, apples, nuts, etc. That doesn't sound so bad, and it tastes better than it sounds.

Who said "high cost of living"? Take a full breath, help yourself to some more turkey, have a glass of cider—and forget it!

HUNTER CLIMBS UP A TREE WITH BEAR IN WAITING

His Trusty Rifle, Used as a Club, Had Twice Warned
Bruin Not to Pursue.

AND COLD DAY WANES.

When "Chase Them" Charley
Is About to Drop the Wild
Beast Turns—and Runs.

Charles Hermin of Newton, N. J., was one of a party of hunters who left his home a few days ago in search of pheasants, rabbits and red foxes. Camp was pitched near the Rocky Hill claims.

SO HE HELD
IT IN HIS

where trappers and Indians used to pursue game 100 years ago. Hermin, known as "Chase Them" Charley, was left all alone one day to cook.

The sky was blue above. "Chase Them" Charley was reading a book. Nothing was stirring. Only the crackling of the embers of the camp fire made a crackle.

A sapling snapped. The hunter's keen ear, so attuned to the silence of the forest, heard the sound. Quick as thought he was on his feet, his trusty rifle in his hands. He peered cautiously through the bushes. Out there on the reservation was a dark brown object, which made the hunter shiver, brave though he was.

The animal turned with a low, menacing growl, as the hunter jumped through the thicket. Steady who it was, the bear beat it down the trail.

Crack! The sound of "Chase Them" Charley's rifle broke the stillness of the morning air. The bear was stung.

With a roar the wounded beast turned on his pursuer. For the first time the hunter realized that his rifle was empty. He made tracks. Glancing over his shoulder as he tore alone through the undergrowth, he saw, in a flash, that the bear was gaining on him. Used to woodcraft, the hunter made for the nearest tree. He could not sling his rifle over his shoulder as they used to do in the old days, for he had no sling. So he held it in his mouth as he shinned up the bark.

He did not know this bear. The mean "critter," wounded though he was, climbed after him. "Chase Them" Charley reached a branch and, as he did, took the rifle out of his mouth. He was not a moment too soon. The head of the bear appeared above the branch. Taking his gun from his mouth, the hunter clubbed it. Holding the barrel by both hands, he swung with the and waited. Night came, and with it more cold. The bear got cold. Finally, just as "Chase Them" Charley was about to fall out of the tree, the bear, with a growl that shook the forest, looked up once more, and shivering with the cold, turned tail and beat it. The hunter dropped from his perch, staggered, and ran back to camp to tell his fellow hunters all about it.

From Top of Head to Chest. Itched
So Could Hardly Keep From Scratching. Tied Her Hands.
Spread Fast. Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment Cured.

R. F. D. No. 1, Fort Norris, N. J. — "My baby's disease came as a surprise and the water from it spread it and made a solid sore from the top of her head to the chest. Whenever she turned her head the blood would run from her neck. She was disfigured while it lasted and she was cross and fearful nights and days. It took me a long time to get her from scratching. I tied her hands. It was on her three months and it still spread fast.

"I tried ————, salves of all kinds and medicines, but in vain. I saw the Cuticura Soap and Ointment advertisement, so I sent for some and they did the work great. You could see it heal and new skin made every time it was washed. Cuticura Soap and Ointment cured her in a little over three months." (Signed) Mrs. Viola Hart, Jan. 7, 1912.

stock on Bruin's head. The stock stood the shock. It brought ruin to Bruin.

Down went the bear to the bottom of the tree, but growling strongly. Then up the tree he went again, like a human on a telegraph pole. Out on the branch the hunter hung 'twixt life and death. Standing out there on the slender branch, he waited. He had not long to wait. The bear put one foot on the branch, as if to try its strength. Then he put another foot on it. Another step it would have been his next. Swift through the air the redoubtable rifle swung and again the bear went toppling to the ground.

"Chase Them" Charley wiped the sweat from his brow and sat down on the outer branch of the tree to cogitate. How long he cogitated he knew not. Occasionally the bear looked up and growled. The afternoon waned and it was cold. Like a faithful collier, the bear stood under the tree and watched Detective Questions Many Boys Following Race Fights and Stabbing.

When the many flat fights which have occurred between the white and negro pupils of the Vocational School for Boys at No. 10 West One Hundred and Thirty-eighth street culminated last night in the attack by a group of young negroes on sixteen-year-old Frederick Wopchall of No. 1490 Avenue A, in the course of which the boy was stabbed beneath the right shoulder, Detective Courvoys was assigned to discover his assailants. Wopchall, who was treated at Harlem Hospital and sent home, didn't know who had stabbed him.

Courvoys questioned many boys in the principal's office to-day. Walter Keeler, a young negro of No. 11 West One Hundred and Thirty-seventh street, admitted that he had been in the crowd, but had not taken part in the stabbing. He had a revolver in his pocket, fully loaded, and was taken to Harlem Court, where Magistrate Schulz held him in $1,000 bail for trial in Special Sessions.

2,000 STRIKE PICKETS SWARM AT THE GATES OF ELECTRIC PLANT

Union Forces Make Addition to Ranks, but Works in Schenectady Still Open.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Nov. 26.—Two thousand union pickets were thrown around the plant of the General Electric Company to-day to appeal to non-union workers to join them in the general walkout which began yesterday.

Shortly before the gates opened for the admission of the day workers the strikers appeared and surged about the outside of the plant. The regular guards insisted that the men and women with pickets to the trolley tracks, which are about 150 feet from the gates. This the strikers refused to do.

While not talk was passing between the guards and the idle workers, Commissioner of Public Safety John E. Cole arrived and took a hand in the discussion. He ruled that the unionists might stand as near the gate as they liked as long as they did not interfere with the work of the plant.

The local board of trade to-day resumed activities in an effort to settle the differences between the company and its men. Yesterday the organization sent a letter to both sides urging that they reach an amicable agreement as quickly as possible.

Strikers and their sympathizers gathered in small groups about the streets and in front of the various union meeting halls. There was practically no disorder, the city assuming, for the most part, a holiday appearance.

Additional pickets to-day wished to have authority to close every saloon in the city. He added that although the charter did not give him this power, if disorder occurred in any section, he would immediately close the saloons in the vicinity.

MYSTERY IN SUICIDE OF NEW YORK ACTRESS

Maida Dupree Found Dying in Philadelphia Hotel After Note to Team-Mate.

Theatrical Broadway is busy with conjecture as to the suicide Monday night in a Philadelphia hotel of Maida Dupree, a vaudeville actress, known also as Maida Lane and Betty Daley. According to George La Maire, her team-mate in a blackface act which has been playing at the Lyric Theatre, in Philadelphia, after an engagement of several weeks at the Winter Garden here, the actress's father, named Grossman or Grossman, lives in New York.

La Maire says she always seemed to have plenty of money. Among her effects was found jewelry to the value of $2,000 and pawn tickets for $1,370 for jewels pledged in New York.

La Maire told the Coroner in Philadelphia he had been called by a note signed Betty Daley to the woman's room. The door was locked, and when the hotel people forced an entrance Maida Dupree was found unconscious. Soon afterward she died. La Maire said he met her in London a year ago. He knew of no reason for suicide.

The Thanksgiving spirit was in evidence all over the place at Fire Headquarters to-day. Commissioner Joseph Johnson, with an eye to the fitness of the season, made fifty-four promotions, made ninety recruits fourth grade firemen and admitted forty aspirants to a smoke-eater's job to the School for Recruits.

Capt. Charles R. Griffith, who is only thirty-five years old, was promoted to be a battalion chief. Lieutenants in the number of twenty-two were made captains and twenty-two foremen were made lieutenants, while nine firemen were promoted to be engineers of steamers.

The Commissioner will open twelve brand new firehouses to-morrow, all supplied with the latest motor equipment. Two of the new houses are in Manhattan, four in the Bronx, four in Queens and two in Brooklyn.

BRIEG, Silesia, Germany, Nov. 26.—The entire local registered mail was stolen by a band of thieves from a train approaching this town last night. It is thought the cash booty was small.

HOFFMANN'S PROGRAMME

ONE HOUR TOO LONG. Josef Hoffmann, at his recital in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon, must have come near to breaking the record for continuous piano playing. Beginning at 3 o'clock, he ended at 5.44, and then looked as if he could keep it up for another two and three-quarter hours.

The house was crowded and the audience, amazed at Mr. Hoffmann's marvellous technique, enjoyed his rich gifts of interpretation until it grew tired, and first by ones and twos, then by scores and, at last, by hundreds, melted away. There was a mere handful of the faithful left to demand the two extra numbers he gave, which took ten minutes that were included in the time schedule. Beethoven's Sonata, op. 108, not one of the most inspired of the master's works and long, and Schumann's "Kreisleriana," that seemed as if it would never end, were enough for one programme. Beside, he played three other Beethoven, four other Schumann and five Liszt numbers, and the two extra ones. Mr. Hoffmann's playing of Liszt's Polonaise was so masterful and brilliant it was a pity so few heard it.

HORATIO CONNELL'S RECITAL

DRAW A LARGE AUDIENCE.

Horatio Connell, baritone, pleased a large audience at Aeolian Hall yesterday afternoon by his recital. He has a voice of such good quality that it is a pity it lacks variety. Beginning with Haydn's "Rolling in foaming billows," his programme included Bach's peasant cantata (one of the best bits to his credit) and compositions by Secchi, Brahms, Hugo Wolf, Brahms, S. Coleridge Taylor and Roger Quilter. Miss Clark Hamman was his accompanist at the piano.

"Thais" Sung In English at The Century

By Sylvester Rawling.

Presented in English at the Century Opera House for the first time last night. There was a large audience that applauded generously and that showed its appreciation by remaining until the end. Sometimes of that elusive thing we call atmosphere was missing, but what the performance really lacked was clear enunciation of the text. Opera in English is on trial. Messrs. Aborn, and those of us who believe in it, and have advocated it for years, are earnest in wishing success to your enterprise. It is not to be understood, one or two of the principal singers last night were generally intelligible. Why not the whole cast? An American abroad who could not enunciate clearly the language of the country in which he or she was singing would be a laughing stock. Yet there are Americans singing in opera houses all over Europe. If American singers can be understood in French or German or Italian, why not in their native tongue?

When Mr. Hammerstein presented "Thais" in French at his Manhattan Opera House it was his good fortune to have the two leading characters interpreted by Mary Garden and Maurice Renaud. Lois Ewell, who was cast for the Alexandrian courtesan last night, patterned herself after Miss Garden's impersonation, a splendid model; but imitation is a doubtful expedient. Miss Ewell would better work out a conception of her own. She was most effective when she relied upon her own talent, and she was lovely to look upon at all times.

Louis Kreidler tried, at least, to work out the character of Athanah, the Cenobite monk, on lines of his own. It will grow stronger with further performances. Gustaf Bergman was good as Nicias, the voluntary, and Alfred Kaufman was satisfactory as Palemon, the head of the Cenobites. Cordelia Latham was the Abbess and Florence Coughlan and Othelia Hoffman were the two slave girls.

The scenery and costumes were lent by the Boston Opera Company. A railroad collision came near to preventing road arrival. The terrace of the house of Nicias at Alexandria, even though the sea were a bit too blue, was attractive, and the action there, including the work of the ballet, led by Albertina Rauch, was effective. "The Meditation" won its usual success. There were disclosures of the pulchritude of members of the company such as had not been made before, sometimes disconcerting.

RUSSIAN SYMPHONY GIVES FIRST CONCERT OF SEASON.

The Russian Symphony Society, Modest Atschuler conductor, gave its first subscription concert of the season at Aeolian Hall last night before a very large audience. Tchaikowsky's "Pathétique" symphony, which Mr. Atschuler directs with such devotion, was first played, the last movement especially well. Then came for strings Tchaikowsky's "Opheleia," Lisel's "Valse Romantique" and Jaernfelt's "Praeludium" the latter for the first time. It is a simple, dainty, captivating little work that was well played and had to be repeated on insistent demand. Glauow's violin concerto was played, with Maurice Warner as soloist, and Rimsky-Korsakoff's attractive "Spanish Caprice" finished the programme.
